For me writing a summary of a book and writing words/lines for a book trailer are something totally different. But somehow, they're totally similar. For a summary, you have to ~~make it~~ <sup>keep it</sup> short, but tell enough so people are interested, but don't give anything away. For book trailers, you have to keep it short, sweet and to the point.

Probably, the most challenging thing (for me) was having this set image in my mind but then when you can't find the picture you want and have to change everything, that's the most frustrating part. All in all, I enjoy doing them and I think it's a great way to promote more kids to start reading! ☺
